George Herseet. The freshness that has cheered thy morning hours, The sunset glory that hath lit thine eye, The night-wind s voice, the sweet perfume of flowers, Have passed into thy life, no more to die, And shall be raised again, in that last day When thy first earth and heaven have fled away. Eliza Scudser. SEVENTH MONTH. The flood-tide of summer is upon the world. Earth sways dreamily on her own atmosphere among the stars, lite the water-lily among her sister-blossoms upon the unruffled bosom of the lake. The white sails on the horizon are like lily-petals languidly drifted by their own breath along the breezeless shimmer of the sea. Nature, at the height and fullness of her beauty, like the enchanted princess, has fallen asleep among her flowers. It is the hour of peace which precedes the change from the morning to the afternoon of the year. For all things there is a noon-pause as well as a night-rest, --though but a half-sleep, thronged with wakeful dreams. The hours of early stir and activity are softly rounded by the restingtime that follows, --the pause of the soul wherein is heard, as of old, a Divine Voice at the centre of all creative effort and accomplishment, saying, in the calm of sacred meditation, It is good. No man can say this of his own work; but through the deep peace that embosoms his...
