Excerpt: . . . we are enabled to think of scenes, of persons, and of things that never were Or have you never heard the story of a little spoiled girl, who, upon being told that she was to have a governess, asked, What sort of a thing it was nay, she said, she was sure it was something very good and very pretty, or papa would not let her have it. The very same faculty that enabled the little girl to form an idea of something good and pretty for her governess, is that by which we seem to view what we have never seen; and that, by the aid of which, I am now going to tell you of a place and of persons that have never fallen under my actual observation. It is called imagination; and, if well regulated, it is not only a constant...
