So unhappy, mother, he replied; and he fairly wept. Never mind, answered the venerable mother; we will make it up for you. Go home and quietly wait, and see what will happen. So he went; and after passing a night so different from those long peaceful nights of old, he awoke weary, and, rising sulkily, went into the forest. And lo! dancing before him was another of the creatures. But ah! she was fair and sweet and kind, --so had the other seemed a year ago; but who profits by experience?-- so he embraced her, and they sought a distant covert where they might hide and eat honey together, and man knew the first happy day he had known for months. But as night approached, she told him with tears that they must part forever, for she must die; for that only had she been created. Yet sorrow not overmuch, continued she, for from my grave a wondrous herb shall spring, from the leaves of which shall come the healing of the nations. And when you shall burn them with fire an exceeding grateful vapor shall arise therefrom, blue as my eyes and sweet as my breath, --for you named them blue and sweet, --which being drawn into thy heart shall cause thee to forget all trouble and sorrow that may ever come upon thee. So saying, she died, and man buried her, and watched secretly over her grave many days, till all was...
